Cemetery: Camp

Alternative names:

Location: On south side of Hwy 762 about two miles east of Habit.

Notes: This writer (Jerry Long) in 1993 was told that the Camp family cemetery had been destroyed by the property owner. On October 9, 2007 Mrs. Rex (Lori) Ferguson, of 6815 Hwy 762, Philpot, KY reported that her family had found the gravestone of Mary, wife of William D. Owen (22 Oct 1838 – 29 May 1858) on property owned by Mary Delacey on south side of Hwy 762 about two miles east of Habit. The monument was located behind a small pond. It was broken and only a small part protruded from the ground. Nearby was a small pile of broken pieces of other monuments. None could be read. The Delacey farm in 1876 was owned by James W. Camp.

Cemetery: Rural Cemetery

Alternative names:

Location: In Owensboro between Triplett, Center, Fourth & Sixth Streets.

Notes: Established in 1852. When Elmwood Cemetery was organized in 1868 reportedly all of the graves were moved to the new city burial ground. The cemetery adjoined the Moseley family cemetery which was not moved.

The following reference to the cemetery was made In a Brief History of St. Joseph's Parish As told by Father Eugene Spiess, O.S.B., Pastor of St. Joseph Parish – Jan. 1906 to Sept. 1921, published in the St. Joseph Parish Bulletin: “The majority of the Germans lived "on the hill". This was out where Sweeney Street now intersects with E.9th. Between this place and the city proper, lay a cemetery and pools of water. You will find remnants of the north-east end of this cemetery over on E.5th St. Opposite St. Paul's Parish house stood and old mill, called Brandfords [sic – Bransford] mill. I saw it there myself. This mill stood where one time there was an entrance to the rather large cemetery I speak of. Another entrance to this cemetery was on Clay St., about half-way between the present St. Joseph school and where 6th St. would intersect with Clay, had the City continued this street through. It could not because the cemetery was in the way. The Todd family informed me, when I bought their estate that they found coffins and remains of the dead in their cellar etc.”

“Old Mill Platform”, Owensboro Messenger, 15 June 1902, p.9: “In about 1851 the firm of Hathaway & Pearl bought a farm, embracing the land on which the mill stands, from Robert Triplett's heirs. The town was growing very rapidly at that time and Hathaway & Pearl laid their farm off in city lots and sold them. The portion between Third and Fourth streets and between Center and Triplett streets was sold to the Rural Hill Cemetery company and, by them, sold off in burial rights. In a few years the city encroached too rapidly upon the cemetery and the ground was in such urgent demand for residence purposes that a proposition was made by the company to holders of burial rights looking to an exchange- for lots of double the dimensions in Elmwood cemetery. The proposition was accepted by most of the holders of rights and the old cemetery was laid off in city lots. It is said that the engineer made a mistake in laying off this section, making Fourth street several feet too narrow...”

Cemetery: Jeremiah Yewell Cemetery

Alternative names: Zion Baptist Church Cemetery

Location: The Zion Baptist Church (Yewell) Cemetery was along the east side of the Old Hartford Road just opposite of the intersection of what is now Southeastern Parkway and the Old Hartford Road and across from the Hillcrest Golf Course; on the back side of where the cemetery was located is a street named Yewells Landing.

Notes: Jeremiah Yewell (1782-1862) was buried in the Yewell family cemetery on his farm. In 1859 the Zion Baptist Church was constituted and located near the cemetery. The gravestone of Jeremiah Yewell and other markers in the Zion Baptist Church (Yewell) Cemetery remained until 1976 when it was decided to relocate the graves due to construction in the area. Members of the Yewell family in the old cemetery were moved to Rose Hill Cemetery in Owensboro.
