

Hayti Cemetery

Hartford, Ohio County, KY

Hayti Cemetery (also spelled as Haiti) is an African-American cemetery in the northeast section of Hartford, KY. It extends along School Street just south of Oakwood Cemetery. The black neighborhood around the cemetery was called Hayti. To the north of the cemetery was a poor white area known as Snow Hill.

Hayti Cemetery is labeled cem in the blue section on the right. The square labeled cem above it is Oakwood Cemetery.

The earliest reference to Hayti Cemetery was found in the newspaper, Hartford News, in 1877. The spelling of the cemetery on the majority of most death certificates and obituaries appears as Hayti. The cemetery also appeared as Haiti Cemetery and Hartford Colored Cemetery.

Hartford Herald, Hartford, KY, Wednesday, 3 October 1877, p.3:

Hayti, the negro settlement in the upper part of town, was the scene of lively little mill Saturday night. About a dozen were engaged in it--women and men--and a regular knock down was the programme, Henry Collins fared the worst of all, as he was beaten until life was thought to be extinct.

The oldest monument found in the cemetery was for Hannah Petticord, who died in 1865. There are several Civil War veterans, who served in the US Colored Troops, buried here. They include – Willis Allen, Wesley Barrett, Washington Eidson, Wesley Foreman, Thomas Griffin, Amos Gunn, George W. Hall, Beverly Harrold, Isaac Horton, Washington Lee, John Anthony McHenry, Thomas Nall, Crit Parks, Joe Parks, Reuben Peyton, John Phipps, Green Phipps, James Rucker and Thomas Rucker.

The following list of burials in the Hayti Cemetery is a composite of several sources – tombstones found in the cemetery, death certificates, obituaries in the Beaver Dam, Hartford & Owensboro, KY newspapers, Casebier Funeral Home records, Chinn Funeral Home records, and WPA registration of veteran's graves for Ohio County, KY. Many in the list and numerous others not identified are buried in unmarked graves.
